"Melinda" - 2nd in a series of "behind the music"

TimothyPaul asked me to do a write up about what the song "Melinda" is about. He told me to keep it simple but intimate! Well as you will learn, I can be intimate always, but simple I am not!

First let me describe to you how I write. I try to put myself in a situation, like a movie or a setting. In the case of "Melinda", a song-smith on a boat getting ready to leave on a voyage. This song-smith reminiscing memories of his love, while staring out at the ocean. Hence the line, "When we set sail, I hope you can make it here on time."

The funny thing to me is that I tend to have double meaning to my lyrics and don't realize it until the song is finished. The original name of this song was "Memories in the Sand." I found it corny then as I do now, but when I read the lyrics and thought about how I and my wife/best friend Melinda met, I found it obvious to change the title!

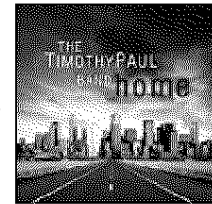

So, at this point " When we set sail, I hope you can make it here on time," is now a reference to meeting up at the bar, setting sail is drinking! So pretty much, it's all in how you (the listener) takes the song.

That's how "Melinda" was written; a bottle of booze, an acoustic guitar, and fond memories of both the ocean (my favorite place) and the one I love..... Melinda!
